

FROM THE ASHES

A once proud nation in ruins, only the true northern regions and the central portion of British Columbia own any semblance of freedom from the invaders. For those unable to flee south or into the mountains life has diminished to acceptance, work camps, an existence for some women sent overseas as breeders, or death. In one work camp Mark Elders struggles to keep himself and his wife alive. Even dreams of freedom have turned to ashes. And then the very thing that keeps him fighting is taken from him. A flare of overt rebellion means sentencing to the death camps. But fate has a couple more options to throw his way, if he will only he will control his rage.
