Excerpt from Psychological Research and Rehabilitation: Conference Report, Miami Beach, Florida, Nov, 9-12, 1960 This volume is a summary of the 1960 Miami Conference on Research in the Psychological Aspects of Rehabilitation. The conference participants were research-visible psychologists, whose major interests were in the subareas of psychology, not in rehabilitation. The major chapters in this summary were written by the participants. Happily this obviated any need on the part of the editor to make second-order interpretations of partial notes on what he thought the participants had discussed. Chapters II through VI were written by participating work-group chairmen, and were reviewed, reacted to, and approved by all of the participants in the particular group. To facilitate reading the thinking reported in the chapters written by the participants, this introductory chapter will describe the origin of the conference idea, the planning and the purposes of the conference, and the particular ways in which the conference was structured for the participants. It is important that the reader have this initial orientation to understand the focus and the extent of the work done by the participating psychologists. Development of the Conference Idea In 1958, the American Psychological Association, with financial support from the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation, United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, sponsored the Princeton Institute on the Roles of Psychology and Psychologists in Rehabilitation. The proceedings of that Institute (Wright, 1959) indicate that broad problems and general issues confronting psychologists and other professional workers in the field of rehabilitation were discussed. Issues arising in the area of research were felt to be of primary significance, but were discussed only in a general way. Furthermore, when participants in the Princeton conference sought to identify unique contributions of psychology to rehabilitation, there was general agreement only on psychologys ability to contribute in the areas of research design and methodology.About the PublisherForgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
